

ENGLISH

From Study to Skills

The English major provides a sequenced curriculum with unique course offerings providing global diversity, interdisciplinary studies, and hands-on experience. English students will be able to develop close relationships with other students and research faculty. English students will develop skills for a variety of positions in business, government, research, education, publishing, as well as in the cultural, entertainment, and communications industries. English as a major is versatile and helps you develop skills useful in many career fields. These qualities and skills will prepare students thoroughly for their professional lives in a wide diversity of fields, as well as for the tasks of responsible citizenship and critical engagement with the larger world in its cultural, social, moral, and aesthetic dimensions.

Related Fields: Business, Creative Writing, Communications, Education, Journalism, History, Law, Public Relations

Skills and Abilities

Critical Thinking Skills- Students will critically interpret and analyze literary texts from various cultures, gain awareness of various critical theories and approaches, and identify themes, styles, and forms of writing.

Reading Skills- Students will identify formal, aesthetic, and rhetorical properties of literary works, identify historical or cultural contexts, understand cultural, intellectual, and literary movements, and evaluate diverse perspectives.

Communication- Students will articulately and concisely communicate ideas in written, oral, visual, and digital presentations independently and in groups. They will also utilize research tools and synthesize ideas using various sources.
